

More than just skiing

HINTERTUX

Get skiing in October

An October trip to the Hintertux Glacier isn't just about getting students on skis – it's a genuinely rich learning experience that ticks multiple boxes.

On the skiing side, students build balance, coordination, resilience, and confidence while learning a completely new skill. You see teamwork develop naturally too – students encourage each other, celebrate small wins, and push themselves outside their comfort zones.

Real world Geography, unforgettable memories.

What makes Hintertux especially powerful is the environmental aspect. You're literally standing on a glacier.

That opens the door to meaningful conversations about climate change, glacial retreat, alpine ecosystems, and sustainable tourism – not as abstract textbook topics, but as something they can see and experience first-hand.

It's active, interdisciplinary learning in action: PE, geography, and science all wrapped into one memorable experience.

Instead of teaching these topics in isolation, you're giving students context, relevance, and a story they'll remember long after they're back in the classroom.
